Gemini, born Fabrice Aragones, grew up in the Paris region. He starts dancing very early and becomes an emblematic figure of Street Dance.

Dancer and choreographer, he works for many productions and shows but also as an international judge for the most famous international choreographic and battles competitions.

Gemini does not limit its artistic universe to urban culture. He is also interested in the fashion, participates as a model in several shows or advertising films for big brands like Agnès B, Louis Vuitton, L'Oréal or Hugo Boss.

He is also interested in photography and making short films by directing several shoots for different companies or artists.

In 2005, Gemini produced and wrote the screenplay for the documentary film "Obsessive Funk", There's interprets the first role, alongside pioneers and legends of Street Dance. This movie has received a very warm welcome, with many screenings around the world. The same year, he worked with several American artists including Grace Jones and Madonna invites him to participate in one of her videos.

From his favorite dance style, the Locking, Gemini founds a international community and an organization called Locking4life. He combines everything he loves, organization and artistic direction of events, photos and video shoots, and the choreography of shows. The Locking4life community, mobilizing more than 40,000 people on social networks, is the world's largest community of this style.

Gemini, however, remains faithful to its first love and continues to intervene as a teacher or speaker, consultant and artistic director for many projects and events. Today, with the support of the French Institute in Cyprus, he was immensely pleased to present his first exhibition "On the One".
